We understand the facts in the case to be these: that the ship chartered as a transport to take a detachment of marines to Vera Cruz from New York, appeared off the harbor of Havana. A boat with three lieutenants of marines and Mr. Twiggs, with a boat's crew, left the ship, and after some parley at the Moro Castle, they ensered the harbor, and landed at the stops at the port captain's office. The American officers did not intend to enter in violation of the laws of the Island; but they did enter without lawful authority, and in violation of the sentary laws; for which they were arrosted. The pensity was a fine of $200 each. The Consul (Gen. Campbell) requested of the Governor (Gen. O'Donnell) to remit the fine. The Governor agreed to do this, if the master of the vessel would make entry, and if, on inspection by a health officer, there was found to be no contistions discountly with Lieut Col. Watsons request, or to obey his comply with Lieut Col. Watsons request, or to obey his corder to this effect, because, in doing so, he would have forfeited his policy of insurance. Lieuts, Baker and Rich paid their fines and sailed in the transport. Gen. Campbell offered to advance the money to pay the fine of Lieut. Jones and Mr. Twiggs, which they declined, and instructed him by letter, not to make the payment. On the Consul's pledge of honor that they would not leave Havans without paying the fine, they were set at liberty, and we cannot believe that they would not leave Havans without paying the fine, they were set at liberty, and we cannot believe that they would be imprisoned.

There seems to be nothing in the case which would pating a complaint of the conduct of Gen. O Donnell, who, we beg leave to say, has been distinguished by his factors. These young gentlemen did not design to violate the quarantine laws—that to very clear; they endeavored to avoid doing so; but for want of proper infermation, they did violate these regulations, and it would seem to have been better to bay the penalty and left their appl
